Experience

Ten years ago, I created my first website. Being a lifelong, creative thinker and artist, I found my way into web design after being inspired by the new medium. I taught myself as much as I could, attended Drexel University to learn about the traditional principles of design. I even boldly competed in a brand new arena before graduating. I began freelancing for experience and enrichment while going to classes daily. Those starting projects eventually gave way to a promising career.

To this day, my desire to learn and constantly stay updated on techniques & tactics burns brighter than ever. Just this past summer, I attended An Event Apart in Boston and was able to meet and talk openly with some of the best minds in the web design industry. The experience was unparalleled. Since then I've been creating with a goal in mind - "Someday I will be leading the younger generation of web designers through my work to gain insight on some of the smartest work in the industry"
